Washington's Pew.

Christ Church, in Alexandria, Va., some six miles below Washington, is an object of much interest. It was completed in 1773, taking the place of a chapel that could not have possessed much elegance, as it sold for £7 10s. The year prior to leaving the chapel Colonel George Washington, then thirty three years of age, was chosen one of the vestrymen. His name is affixed to the contract for the new chursh, which for minuteness of specification would serve as a modle for modern building committees. James Parsons agreed to build the church for £600. "The shingles were to be of the best juniper, three fourths of an inch thick, eighteen inches long and to show six inches.' The mortar for the outside walls, which were of brick, was to be two thirds lime and one third sand; the morter for the inside wall was to be one half lime and one half sand. "The arches and pediments to be in the Tuscan order. The alter piece, pulpit and emopy to be Ionic." But it appears that contractors even in those carly days had some of the failings of modern times. James Parsons failed to fulfill his contract, and the vestry made an agreement with Col. John Carlyle for the additional sum of £220 to complete the work. Og the 27th of February, 1873, the church having been formally delivered to the vesiry, ten of the pews were offered for sale. Pew No. 5, was purchased by Gen. Washington £36,10, the highest price paid. The pews were square, with seats on three sides and the back nearly as high as the head of the occupant. But in 1816 and 1817 some af the old equare news were divided, and the remainder, in 1821, Washington's among the rest, but in 1837 it was restored to its former shape. It was again divided, but soon restored to its original form and so still remains. During the war the cay being in possession of the Union troops, the "Stars and Stripes" floated over his pew. In 1804, George Washington Parko Custis, Mrs. Washington's grandson whom Gen. Washington adonted, presented to the parish Washington's Bible, published in 1772, and

The building has been little by little remodeled to suit the modern tastes.

The old pew of Washington is allowed to ro tain its original shape, except the back is lowered like the rest. Visitors to Washington go in large numbers to attend Sunday morning services at Christ Church, and sit in the pew

A Faithful Dog. An interesting story of a dog has been told by a gentleman who was travelling in France during the late war with Germany. He met one day some wounded soldiers returning to their regiments, and observed one of them who had a little dog, an iron gray terrier, evidently English, following at his heals, but only on three less. In an earnest manner the man told him how the dog had been the means upder Providence of saving his master's life. Ho had been struck by a ball in the ches; when fighting near Ham, and lay on the ground for six hours after the battle was over. He had not lost consciousness, but the blood was flowing freely, and he was getting weaker and weaker. There were none but the dead near him, and his only companion was the English terrier, who prowled-restlessly round him, with his master's kepi (military cap) in its mouth, At last the dog set off at a trot, and the wounded soldier felt sure that his only friend had deserted him.

The night grew dark and the cold intense, and he had not even the strength to touch his wounds, which every instant graw more and more painful. His limbs grew cold, and, feeling a sickly faintness stealing over him, he gave up all hope of life, and recommended himself to God. Suddenly, when it had come to the worst, he heard a bark, which he knew belonged to only one little dog in the world; he felt something lick his face, and saw the glare of lanterns. The dog had wandered for miles till be had reached a roadside inn. The people had heard the cannon all day, and, seeing the kepi in the dog's mouth, and noticing his restless movements, followed him. He took them straight to the spot, faster than they could follow him with a little cart, just in time. When the friendly help arrived the man had fainted, but was saved. There were tears in the man's eyes whilst he told the story. The dog had also been touched in the the leg by a ball in the same battle, and had since been lame. He had got him when a puppy from a sailor at Dunkirk, and called him "Beal." Many weeks later, in a different part of France, the same geotleman, stopping at some village, recognized Beal, who also recognized him. On inquiry be found that in a more recent battle poor Beal or late master had been killed, and its present owner knowing the soldier and the dog, had taken pily on the pooranimal, and adopted him as his own, Beal had attached himself to him, to a certain extent, but still seemed restless, and grieving for his late master. On the gentleman's leaving to confor some distance, and then, looking wistful'y at him, turned and trotted slowly back.
